

Nine Chillers at Former IBM Plant Recovered by Rapid Recovery

Phoenix, AZ. April 25, 2007 – Rapid Recovery, a refrigerant abatement company servicing the continental United States, recently completed a project in Fishkill, NY at a former IBM facility.

The plant contained nine chillers located in a single mechanical room. Each chiller contained between 1,000 and 3,000 lbs of R-11.

Rapid Recovery arrived on April 23, 2007 to begin the work. Two recovery machines were utilized in order to recover two chillers simultaneously. The two man crew worked together to ensure that the project went smooth with as little down time as possible. By working efficiently, the job was completed on the following day. Les Rhynard of Rapid Recovery said, “It is always our goal to provide a value added service that not only gets the job done correctly, including the required EPA documentation, but also is completed in the most efficient way possible. Time is an asset that you can’t get back once it is gone. We put forth our best effort on every job to save our customers their time.” Rapid Recovery has a history of completing large jobs in amazingly short time frames, to their customers delight. Some of these jobs include fifty-seven Super Kmart locations throughout twenty states, including Alaska, in just twenty-four days; eighty-seven Winn-Dixie locations in North and South Carolina in just fifteen days; and a former GM assembly plant with over eight hundred units in just nine days.
